Abstract: The 20th century testified a deep change in the Western classical music, since new compositional procedures substituted the traditional organization of the tonal system. Latin American composers followed this tendency in a larger or smaller degree, according to their necessity of creating pieces at the same time modern and characteristic of their continent. Some examples of this process will be shown in this paper, using as parameters 54 pieces that comprise the "Compositores Latino-americanos" collection of CDs, recorded by the pianist Beatriz Balzi.

Música latino-americana para piano no século XX: um estudo de caso

Resumo: O século XX marcou uma profunda mudança na música erudita ocidental, uma vez que novos procedimentos compostoriais substituíram a tradicional organização do sistema tonal. Compositores latino-americanos seguiram tal tendência em maior ou menor grau, de acordo com suas necessidades de criar peças, ao mesmo tempo, modernas e características de seu continente. Alguns exemplos deste processo serão mostrados neste artigo, que usa como parâmetro 54 peças da série de CDs "Compositores Latino-americanos", gravada pela pianista Beatriz Balzi.

1. Introduction

As a cultural practice, concert music seems to reflect fashions and costumes of the Western world since the end of the XVIII century. In the 19th century, for example, the nationalist current that also unified countries like Germany and Italy and gave a relative independency to the Hungarians from the Austrian Empire, gave birth to a great number of czardas, polonaises, mazurkas, marches and other romantic genres based on folk material. "The first degree of this 'national rebirth' was, invariably, to find, rescue and be proud of his folkloric heritage" (HOBSBAWM, 2005: 129). Regarding to the piano music, this elements received a well-elaborated treatment in order to be worthy of the best European stages. This would occur in the Latin American continent almost a century later.

After 1900, new historical situations influenced western art music. The same Eric Hobsbawm (2011: 23-25) points out remarkable transformations in what he called "the short 20th century". In his words, the two world wars (1914-18 and 1939-45) amplified the global spectrum from some developed European nations to the United States and to Japan. The capitalist economy increased communication and vehicles of transport. Television became part of everyday life, changing old patterns of human relationships.

What about Latin American countries in this process? As we said before, most of them just experienced a nationalist movement in the cultural field in the first decades of the 20th century¹. With the eruption of the First World War, countries such as Mexico, Brazil, Argentina and Chile started a timid process of industrialization to substitute some imported items, whose escalating costs became unbearable. This also motivated some governments to stimulate musical projects in their countries, aiming at enhancing a cultural heritage with proper characteristics of the continent.

Questions of identity would pervade Latin American musical production throughout the first half the 20th century, although they would not be totally forgotten until its very end, as we will show in this paper.

2. Latin American piano music and the "Compositores Latino-americanos" collection

In this article, we observe how Latin American composers used some compositional procedures invented in the 20th century to create a repertoire, at the same time, modern and characteristic of their continent. For this proposition, we used as a parameter 54 piano works recorded by the Argentinian-Brazilian pianist Beatriz Balzi in a CDs collection, named by her "Compositores Latino-americanos"². Balzi was internationally acknowledged as a specialist in this repertoire when she died, in 2001 (MONTEIRO DA SILVA, 2014: 336). This is why we believed in her choices to illustrate the following procedures, taken from analysis of the 54 pieces from the Latin American piano repertoire, registered by her.

3. Compositions, authors, nationality and CD

Balzi's collection of music scores revealed a wide panorama of different aesthetics³. In this paper, tables were built to make it easier to visualize the compositions according to the tendency they are related. First of all, a table brings all the 54 pieces recorded by Balzi in her CDs series (named C.L.A. in this table), divided into specific rows of nationality, author, recorded piece, and CD where it can be found.

4. Nationalist and Experimentalist currents

The second table makes reference to the nationalist and experimentalist currents that parted the 20th century in before and after 1950, respectively. This statement was made by the respectable researcher on Latin American music Gérard Béhague (apud BETHELL, 1999: 339), despite the multiple possibilities that can be observed in each current⁴. Among Balzi's repertoire, compositions from 11 in 13 countries recorded (except for Chile and Panama)⁵, created in the first half of the 20th century, present folk material in their structure, derived from popular songs and dances. For those composed after 1950, works from 9 in 13 countries present other kind of melodic, rhythmic and metrical organization. The exceptions are Colombia, Guatemala, Panama and Peru.

5. Harmonic Procedures

Tonal and atonal pieces appear in the C.L.A. collection. Many of the tonal ones were influenced by the impressionist style of Claude Debussy and other French composers⁶.

Among the latter, serial procedures appear less frequently, as the third table testifies. The nonserial atonal music (using the 12 tones without a prevalent order) was largely exemplified due to its expressionist character, which could allude to extra-musical references like romances, historical events or political heroes⁷. Modal and polymodal compositions also appear in the third table.

6. Musical Genre⁸

Different musical genres were registered by Balzi in her C.L.A. collection. Table 4 calls attention to the great number of sonatas, preludes, studies, theme and variations, suites, airs, nocturnes and barcaroles, that could point out a neoclassical style adopted by some Latin American composers during the 20th century. It is interesting, however, to observe some genres invented in the continent, derived from Latin American popular songs and dances. They are tristes, gatos, bailecitos, trozos, ponteos, cirandas, tangos, among others.

7. Rhythm and metrics

Rhythm and metrics are crucial elements in the Latin American classical music, for their usual complexity. This is rooted in the African and indigenous presence in the continent. Some of these approaches coincide with new compositional procedures created by the North Hemisphere authors, like changing time signature (alternation between 3/4, 2/4 and others in the same piece or movement), polymeter (simultaneous use of more than one time signature), and ametric music (absent metric).

8. Latin American composers

Although they had identity concerns, 35 in 51 composers recorded by Balzi in her collection travelled to the North Hemisphere to complement their musical studies. They were thirsty for novelties and did not want to be isolated from the rest of the world. The Uruguayan composer Héctor Tosar talks about the 50' decade:

“Few things occurred in Uruguay in the musical field. [...] The situation was dramatic, and we needed external interchange. [...] We said nothing but what we felt [...] and we could not say much because we did not have judgments’ elements”⁹.

In their return, almost all of them assumed pedagogical functions in their countries. The most wanted country to go seems to have been the United States, followed by France and Germany. 3 composers travelled to countries inside Latin American continent, such as Argentina, Brazil and Chile. Please notice the amount of composers who studied with Aaron Copland in the USA (5 in 12), marked with (*). The ones who went to more than one country had their repeated names written in italic. The countries where they were born are signed next to their names, between parentheses.

9. Pedagogical functions assumed by the Latin American composers

While 20 in 51 composers registered by Balzi directed, or even founded institutions for musical education in their countries, others taught in already existent schools of music (20), created or directed orchestras (7), and created or directed journals and radios to divulge Latin American Music (6). The last table testifies:

Table 7 – Composers who assumed pedagogical functions in their countries

10. Some considerations

The Latin American piano pieces analyzed in this paper show the identity concern that accompanied their authors during the 20th century. At the same time, the tables present procedures that testify their dialogue with the modern tendencies created in Europe and in the USA in the referred period of time. Analysis on 20th century Latin American piano pieces are considerably increasing in the 21st century, being worthy of mention the works of GERLING, ANDRADE and BUJES (2005), SOARES (2006), LOVAGLIO (2008), PARASKEVAÍDIS (2009) and IBACETA (2010). This paper intends to contribute to this task.

Notes

¹ Even though most of the Latin American countries conquered independency around 1800, it needed a century for movements like Mexican revolution to motivate the arising of identity questions in the continent.

² Beatriz Balzi produced this collection from 1984 to 2000, with musical examples of 13 countries in seven volumes. These countries are Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Cuba, Guatemala, Mexico, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela. 51 composers had their piano pieces recorded by her. Three of them appear in more than one CD: Carlos Guastavino, Graciela Paraskevaídis and Alberto Ginastera.

⁴ Some specific characteristics in both nationalist and experimentalist categories will be shown in the next table.

⁶ They used what Stefan Kostka (1999: 2) called chromatic tonal music, or, the insertion of chromaticism in traditional tonal functions and passages, to give them different colors.
